

Observations of Massive Star Formation

Dr Stuart Lumsden

The formation mechanism for massive stars is poorly understood, as are the interactions between the stars themselves and the molecular clouds in which they are born. This project offers the possibility of studying the net effect that outflows, winds and radiation have on the cloud, whilst testing whether ongoing accretion relates to the place of birth or instead the stars passage through the cloud.